

Fabian Socialist Agenda?

By Elizabeth Safrany 10th June 2010

While we may or may not see the end of Rudd, can we say this country will be back on track in so far as going back to the Constitution and what it stands for? I have my doubts about it, as it is slowly being eroded in a subtle way.

Rudd and the Labor party stand for socialism. Australians are refused a vote in referendums on issues that impact on them such as immigration, multiculturalism and that all matters to us as Australians. We are being governed by a Fabian Society.

Malcolm Fraser once said on TV there was no difference between ALP and the Coalition. He also made a statement claiming that Labor and the Coalition had a bi-partisan agreement to retain high immigration and keep it off the election. Is this democracy, and if the Liberals win government, will immigration be any different? Is this what we call democracy when these things are kept from the Australian people?

Unless voters choose a party that makes the citizens this country and its constitutions priority, instead of pandering to the United Nations and take all major issues that concerns its people to the Peoples Referendum we will lose the fight to win back our sovereignty which our forefathers fought so hard to keep for generations to come.

We must awake from our present mentality and stop thinking she'll be right mate, even a blind man can see that all is not right. If nothing is done soon our sovereignty and democracy will be forever lost.

We are being duped in believing these politicians are doing what is right for us, in actual fact they are not they are doing this for the world-wide Fabian socialist agenda. This agenda has been orchestrated by this hideous group of so called think tanks and intellectuals for a long time and this canker is spreading.
