Ever Wondered Why Labor Governments Begin to Fall Apart... Just After Winning an Election?

Why is it that, come election time, the Labor Party always has the best TV advertisements, the slick personalities on every talk back show, the snappy slogans and the wheelbarrows full of dollars to throw around?

Why do the Liberal Party speakers struggle to get on TV and then when they do, they stumble and bumble and never seem to put their story across as well as those clever people from Labor?

Well here it is. Labor spent decades out of office. During that time they drew hundreds of thousands of dollars of hard working Australian's union dues and used the money to create a slick media machine so they could win back power for themselves. They also used the time to carefully select, educate, and groom a new generation of media savvy Labor machine robot personalities for power.

The people they chose were often the sons (and in some cases grandsons) of former Labor leaders, men who knew what a hard day's work was all about. These were to be the polished and educated seeds of the early union men.

But here is the problem, this modern generation of Laborbot "stars" have never done a day's work in the "real" world in their lives.

Sure, they know how to talk the talk, but they never got their shoes, hands and carefully coiffured hair messed up walking the walk. In other words, out side of their cosy Laborbot party world of failed dogmas, slogans and hype, they have NO practical experience to draw on.

The laborbot system that grooms these "stars" produces indoctrinated masters of spin, but these same people always lack real world substance. They rarely held down a job in private enterprise!

Why is that? Because the basic flaw in Labor's machine is that NOBODY in the movement has had any real understanding of Middle Australia, the value of a dollar, what Australians think, what they aspire too, what they hold dear and what they care about since well before the failed Whitlam Government of the nineteen seventies.

Bob Hawk was a silver tongued University and ACTU whiz kid from a leading Labor family. His track record? He did little more than con Australian workers out of real wage rises while at the same time big noting himself around the world at every opportunity.

Keating was next in the line of media "stars" or at least would be stars to make the top job. Paul Keating's only management experience was with the 'The Ramrods' rock band. His father was a trade union representative. Cocooned safely in the Laborbot world incubator, he eventually rose to lead the ALP's Youth Council. He also worked as a clerk and then as a research assistant for a trade union. All great back stabbing and crawling experience for a treasurer and future Prime Minister. Of course it was Keating who gave Australia the recession we had to have - mainly because he didn't have a clue what he was doing. Like Hawk, Keating loved the limelight and became a master of the great put down - and little else!

During the Howard Liberal Government years, Labor wandered in the wilderness and just like the proverbial Children of Israel they learned absolutely nothing.

Poor Kim Beasley, a decent fellow but another child of the Laborbot machine, struggled along for years carrying the dead corpse of Labor's ambition until toppled by the brawler and penny rocket Mark Latham. Well he didn't last long... out he went!

And then came Kevin 07, another empty headed, incompetent, egotistical, motor mouth and carrier of same old Laborbot disease - no substance!

There have certainly been plenty of characters willing to play with the people's destiny in the Labor pantheon of tin gods - but a great scarcity of men or women is substance. Not one you could call a Statesman!

And now we have the Red Terror, crawler, and knife wielder supreme, Julia Gilard in the driver's seat. Is she any different or better than Whitlam, Hawke, Keating or Rudd? No... she's stamped from the same mould, but in her case the mould is older and the copy even less true to the Laborbot plan!

For all those unlucky Laborbots, there is only one road ahead and that is clearly signposted - OBLIVION!

So why so does Labor always quickly fail in government? It fails two reasons. Firstly, the machine long ago ditched it's driver - the people. Secondly, and more importantly, the skills set so carefully cultivated by the Laborbot movement (all around the world - UK in particular) is a totally different set to that needed to manage an economy, serve a people or even to create a national vision for the future.

Laborbot leaders see themselves as masters, when in fact they must become servants before they can help the people.

Australia doesn't need media stars, recycled TV presenters, pop singers and union stooges to run the country. We need real people who are sworn to serve the people, not just their own egos.

Unlike Labor, One Nation is here to serve you!

And Why do the Liberals Always Fall Just Short of the People's Expectations?

Because in spite of what Liberals may try to tell themselves, they do not FULLY represent the people - and never have.

Come election time the Liberal Party dashes madly around, cap in hand, begging for corporate or member donations to fight the next desperate battle. It's really a sad situation to behold because it says that those money people who run the party from behind their secretive state executives (just like the Labor Caucus that is so often hated and vilified by the public) don't give a dam about the party between elections. Most of them are too busy looking after themselves.

The Liberals have always been the servants of big business and powerful vested interests - many of whom are international corporations with no allegiance to Australia. As time marches on, the Liberal Party becomes more and more the slave of these special interests and less and less able to, or even willing to, take into account the fact that it should be first serving the Nation and the people.

The only reason the Liberals do better in government than Labor is that as a general rule they can add up - they have more business brains, and so they usually don't get themselves into financial strife. But no matter how you turn this Lib/Lab conundrum around, neither Labor or the Liberals have the people's interests at heart.

Only one party is free of union baggage, spin and the vested interests of the "big" end of town and that is the little guys - ONE NATION!
